

Specialization: Economics, bachelor's degree, full-time study

B1.B23 Money and financial markets annotation

4 ECTS, 144 academic hours.

Control form: exam.

Summary. Monetary or monetary policy is considered one of the the main instruments of the state, with the help of which the latter can carry out impact on the economy. However, it is impossible to consider monetary politics in isolation from the financial system. And in the context of globalization of world financial system and increasing the role of financial markets, the need to study the relationship monetary policy and financial markets are becoming apparent.

The course examines the issues of monetary policy - goals and tools, at the disposal of the monetary authorities, the central bank, influence on the banking system as a whole, as well as inflationary processes, real production volumes and employment, and also provides a general concept of the financial system and the role of financial markets in her.

Logically, the Course is a general overview of the concept of monetary policy and financial markets, covers an overview of global experience in the field of monetary regulation The lectures are supposed to present the theoretical foundations of monetary regulation and financial systems, as well as detailed and practical analysis of country experiences the world in the field of monetary policy, including in terms of the impact of financial globalization.

Seminars include two main components: testing, which is aimed at testing theoretical knowledge in the field of the studied discipline, and also various kinds of practical tasks, carrying the goal of giving students practical research skills. In particular, the second block includes preparation presentations on given topics, group work, discussions, writing a research works (essays), defense and presentation of research work.

Students are provided with assistance in self-study of the material, carried out additional clarification of the most difficult questions on an individual basis.

The independent work of students includes research activities, preparation of presentations, work in a group, familiarization with analytical materials in within the discipline, doing homework in preparation for seminars classes, etc.

Relationship with other disciplines of the specialty: course "Money and Financial Markets" interconnected with such disciplines of the specialty "Economics" as "Microeconomics", "Macroeconomics", "Probability Theory and Mathematical Statistics", etc.

Requirements for the initial levels of knowledge and skills of students: Starting to study this course, students should have knowledge and skills in the field of economics and mathematics in the framework of secondary general education. Besides, students must have previously studied disciplines such as macroeconomics and finance.